It is claimed by many that the Korean paper excels the very best that is made and paper accels the very best that is made entirely by manual labor and without the use of any machinery. The raw material used for the better kinds is obtained from the bark of the Prousonetta papyrifers, which is collected in the spring and beaten in water containing a large sduixture of wood askee until reduced to a thick pulp.

The paper is made from old scraps trodden into pulp, much in the same way that grape juke is settered in some countries, and, though this mode of pulpries, and though the device of much as when machinery is used.
